70-HOUR WORKWEEK?
Boston-area UPS drivers are taking a stand after learning they may have to put in 70 hours per workweek this holiday season. 3

A large black UPS delivery truck is shown from the side and rear. The back of the truck is open, and a driver in a brown jacket and khaki pants is loading cardboard boxes. A yellow traffic barrel and an orange traffic cone are on the ground in front of the truck. The UPS logo and 'Worldwide Service Synchronizing the world of commerce' are visible on the side of the truck. The number 106049 is on the back of the truck.

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Millions of packages will be shipping around the country this holiday season — UPS alone expects to deliver 750 million. And to handle that, the company just announced that drivers could be working up to 70 hours in an eight-day period through early January. Local union UPS drivers are against that, read about why they say it's unsafe inside and at metro.boston.us.

TRUMP OUTLINES CUTS TO UTAH MONUMENTS

I President Donald Trump announced big cuts to Utah's sprawling wilderness national monuments on Monday, angering tribes and environmental groups that want to keep the areas off limits to development. Trump's announcement follows a months-long review by the Interior Department that he ordered in April to identify which of 27 monuments designated by past presidents should be rescinded or resized to provide states and local communities more control over how the land is used. Unlike national parks that can only be created by an act of Congress, national monuments can be designated unilaterally by presidents under the century-old Antiquities Act, a law meant to protect sacred sites, artifacts and historical objects.

CVS, AETNA EXECUTIVES DEFEND $69B DEAL

2 CVS and Aetna said their $69 billion deal to combine the pharmacy and drug benefit manager and the No. 3 U.S. health insurer would transform healthcare and deliver cost savings, but investors took a pessimistic view of the combination in the short term. CVS and Aetna announced on Sunday that they had reached an agreement for a deal that will allow CVS to expand cheaper medical services in its pharmacy-based MinuteClinics and rein in soaring U.S. healthcare costs for consumers, large corporations, and the government. CVS CEO Larry Merlo said on an investor call that he expects the deal to close in 2018 after an antitrust review, and that he expects $750 million in savings from eliminating duplicate corporate functions at CVS and Aetna and combining some drug health plan and drug benefit management areas.

SOUTH KOREA AND US LAUNCH AIR DRILLS

4 The U.S. and South Korea went ahead with large-scale joint aerial drills, a move North Korea had said would push the Korean peninsula to "the brink of nuclear war", ignoring calls from Russia and China to call them off. The drills come a week after North Korea said it had tested its most advanced intercontinental ballistic missile capable of reaching the U.S. as part of a weapons program that it has conducted in defiance of international sanctions and condemnation. Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said it was "regrettable" that all parties had not "grasped the window of opportunity" presented by two months of relative calm before the North's most recent test. China and Russia had proposed that the U.S. and South Korea stop major military exercises in exchange for North Korea halting its weapons programs.

FACEBOOK ROLLS OUT APP FOR KIDS UNDER 13

5 Facebook rolled out Messenger Kids, an app that lets the social media company expand into a so-far untapped market of kids under 13 while also giving parents complete control over what their children see. Facebook normally requires users to be at least 13 years old. The new app gives it a chance to win brand loyalty from younger children at a time when it faces competition for teenagers from other social media platforms such as Snapchat. There already are a handful of other apps that children can use with parental consent, and kids can communicate with each other using texting on cellphones. Facebook said research showed young children were already using technology on a regular basis — but on apps built for teens and adults, raising concern among parents that their children might be communicating with strangers.

Boston UPS drivers oppose possible 70-hour workweeks

UPS drivers are standing up against the notion of working 70 hours per week this holiday season.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The holiday season is always a busier time for UPS, but this year, drivers are standing up against even longer workweeks.

Union UPS drivers gathered Monday morning for meetings in Boston and other New England UPS locations as part of a demonstration to oppose 70-hour workweeks during the holidays.

Sean O'Brien, president of Teamsters Local 25 in Boston and the principal executive officer of Teamsters Joint Council 10 New England, said that the meetings were organized "to inform [our members] that the company has taken a position where it wants to require them to work 70 hours per week, as opposed to the 60 hours per week we currently enjoyed."

The added hours, O'Brien said, pose a safety risk not only to the drivers delivering packages, but also to the public.

"Our members that deliver packages, whether commercial or residential, they handle every single package in those trucks. ... The more hours they work, the more potential for them to get hurt at work," he said. "More importantly, some folks out there are driving close to 70 hours, and it's a public safety issue because of accidents and fatigue that can set in."

UPS informed employees on Friday in the Boston area that they could be scheduled to work up to 70 hours in an eight-day period through Jan. 5, 2018.

Under federal Department of Transportation regulations, drivers are limited to 60 hours worked in a seven-day period or 70 hours worked in an eight-day period. O'Brien said that the latter usually pertains to tractor-trailer drivers, who he said have a less physically demanding job than those delivering packages.

The actual amount of hours UPS workers will drive depends on the delivery demand, the company said.

"We recognize that UPS has an obligation to the general public as far as e-commerce and delivering packages is concerned," O'Brien said. "The difference is that UPS has the ability to hire as many people as they need without protest from the union to ensure that these packages get delivered."

"UPS has obviously taken the position that they want to do more with less and put this burden of poor planning on the backs of our members," he added.

This year, UPS expects to deliver 750 million packages between Thanksgiving and Dec. 31, a 5 percent increase from that time period last year. UPS hires an additional 95,000 people to work at their facilities and as drivers during the holidays.

O'Brien said he ensures the safety of the union UPS drivers and that members will know by the end of this week if the 70-hour schedule will be forced or voluntary.

In a statement, UPS said that the company "appreciates the exceptional effort of all employees during our peak holiday shipping season, when daily delivery volumes are near double the normal level."

Union UPS drivers gathered at the Norwood UPS Center and across New England on Monday morning after news broke that they may be scheduled for 70-hour workweeks through the holidays. SEAN MARTIN

Salvation Army receives first anonymous jewelry donation of the season

It's become somewhat of a tradition for Massachusetts donors to drop pieces of jewelry into those Salvation Army red kettles.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The Salvation Army's red kettles are as much of a sign of the holidays as the Boston Common Christmas Tree, and now another marker of the season is here: The first anonymous jewelry donation into one of those kettles.

An anonymous donor dropped a diamond-and-gold fish brooch into a Salvation Army kettle in downtown Boston, the organization announced Monday.

A Salvation Army red kettle in Downtown Crossing got the first jewelry donation of the season. PROVIDED BY SALVATION ARMY

The brooch is valued at nearly $5,000, the Salvation Army said, and was donated through a kettle at Downtown Crossing on Nov. 29.

"The kind soul that donated this brooch is emblematic of the generosity and charity we see in Massachusetts every holiday season," said Major David B. Davis, the Salvation Army's Massachusetts divisional commander, in a statement.

It's the first such gift to the organization this year, the Salvation Army noted, but the idea of donating jewelry is not new. The practice has actually become somewhat of a tradition in Massachusetts, beginning in 2014 when a widow dropped her diamond ring and her late husband's wedding band into a kettle.

The brooch donated this year is made of 18K gold and 32 diamonds weighing 1.58 karats. It will be auctioned off along with any other future red kettle jewelry donations, the Salvation Army said.

"It's clear that our first jewelry donor in 2014 touched the hearts of a lot of people through her gift," Davis said. "Her act of generosity has inspired dozens of people every year since to contribute in a major way to our goal of providing coats and warm meals to individuals in need this winter."

Mass. Senate prez to step down while investigation into husband unfolds

Senate President Stanley Rosenberg, under mounting pressure from inside and outside of the State House, will step down as the leader of the Senate for the duration of an investigation into allegations of sexual assault against his husband Bryon Hefner.

Rosenberg, in a letter that was shared with members of his leadership team at morning meeting Monday, said he intended to take a "leave of absence as your president, effective immediately" for as long as the investigation lasts.

"I believe this is in the best interests of the Senate. I want to ensure that the investigation is fully independent and credible, and that anyone who wishes to come forward will feel confident that there will be no retaliation," Rosenberg wrote in the letter, which was shared with the News Service by someone who had received it.

Stanley Rosenberg plans to step down as Senate president during the investigation into allegations against his husband. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Rosenberg asked in the letter that the Senate elect an "Acting President" in his absence. Democrats plan to discuss how to proceed in a closed-door caucus ahead of a planned formal session in the afternoon.

Tensions ran high as senators arrived on Beacon Hill Monday morning prepared to discuss how to proceed with an investigation into allegations of sexual assault against Hefner with the political career of Hefner's husband, Amherst Democrat

Rosenberg, hanging in the balance. Senators are paying attention to allegations anonymously made to the Boston Globe by four alleged male victims that Hefner boasted about influence he wielded over Senate policy decisions.

Rosenberg's grip on power in the Senate appeared to be tenuous after the weekend.

Several Democrats were reportedly making calls to their colleagues to either round up support to succeed Rosenberg or to urge their colleagues not to commit to a successor until it was decided whether Rosenberg would remain on the job.

"The caucus will decide the direction," Ways and Means Chairwoman Karen Spilka told reporters on her way into a meeting with Democratic leadership. "I've been calling people to talk about the issues, but ..." she said, cutting herself short. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Chris and Anna's 'irreconcilable differences'

Chris Pratt — known to you, perhaps, as the main guy from "Guardians of the Galaxy" — has officially filed for divorce from Anna Faris. As expected.

The former couple — who announced their separation in August — were married for about eight years. In the divorce filing, Pratt cited irreconcilable differences and requested joint custody of their 5-year-old son, Jack. According to TMZ, it is unclear whether either has asked for the right to receive child support.

When announcing their split on Facebook and Instagram, Pratt and Faris wrote that coming to the decision to separate was difficult for them both. "We tried for hard for a long time and we're really disappointed," they wrote. "We still love each other

We said it before, we've said it a million times since, and we'll say it again now: Love is dead, or whatever.

Why Sammi is skipping the GTL reunion

The sacred GTL is returning with "Jersey Shore: Family Vacation." But Sammi "Sweetheart" has opted out — for a very obvious reason.

On her podcast, "It's Happening," Snooki explained, promising she wouldn't speak for Sammi. She then proceeded to do just that.

Come back, Sammi! Or prioritize your mental health, whichever.

"There was a lot of Ron and Sam drama when we did film, it was just really hard on them," she said. "I just think she doesn't want that anymore."

Still, the cast is trying to persuade Sammi to join. "We're all begging her to come back on the show," Snooki said. Only time will tell.

'Long Island Medium' didn't see divorce coming Another day, another divorce: The "Long Island Medium" herself, Theresa Caputo, is splitting from her husband, Larry. But did she see it coming?

The couple, who is splitting after nearly three decades of marriage, made the choice to legally separate and give a joint statement to Page Six, to ensure that everyone knew it.

"We will always love each other and our two wonderful children. We are united in supporting each other and out family. Please respect our privacy during this time." Ah yes, the classic statement asking for privacy while permitting the entire world to glimpse your dirty laundry.

It really, really feels like one of those spirits she communes with could have told her this was going to happen, but, you know, Can't win 'em all.

The higher the hair, the closer to — oh, whatever.

Tavis Smiley brings MLK to the stage

'Death of a King' will be touring the country early next year

With the 50th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination approaching, renowned journalist and bestselling author Tavis Smiley will be bringing his acclaimed book, "Death of a King," to theaters across the country for an innovative multimedia stage production.

Billed as "Death of a King: A Live Theatrical Experience," the production will have Smiley reading passages from the book in front of three large high-definition screens displaying powerful and never-before-seen photos and videos of King, painting a picture of the man many have never seen before. Smiley will be accompanied by jazz piano legend Marcus Roberts, who has written 14 original compositions specifically for this project. Tony Award-winning Broadway and film director Kenny Leon is also serving as the show's creative consultant.

Smiley's biography, along with the production, chronicles the not-so-well-known last year of King's life when he was disillusioned with the heart and soul of America in the midst of the Vietnam war.

The result will paint a powerful portrayal of the man while motivating those who want to see a change in the world. "You're going to leave the theater levitating, realizing that there is still work to be done and we are the ones to do it," says Smiley. "If we want to honor King's life, we have to live his legacy."

Being an important year in the remembrance of King, Smiley also believes that the show will resonate in a powerful way given the state of our nation and will act as a cautionary tale to a society that ignores its truth-tellers.

"America is lost. We just need to be honest about that," says Smiley. "The only thing worse than being lost is being lost and heading in the wrong direction.... America needs a course correction, and the guy who's driving it is not interested in that. He can be the way to get back on the right track to get America moving in the right direction."

"Death of a King: A Live Theatrical Experience" will make its debut on King's birthday, Jan. 15 at the (appropriately named) King's Theatre in Brooklyn. The show will stop in 40 cities, including Memphis — the city where King was killed — on April 4, the 50th anniversary of his death. When I asked Smiley if performing this show on these significant dates would take a toll on him emotionally, he laughed and replied: "I'm trying not to think about it, but I know it's going to be emotional."

King's message and philosophies are as important as ever, and being able to bring them to the people is one of Smiley's greatest joys. "It is my great and deep honor to be able to try and share a bit more about him that might allow us to see him for who he really was," Smiley says. "To finally come to terms with his real legacy, and to get more serious about how to create an America that will one day be as good as it's promise. We're not quite there yet."

"In this country, there is too much of a gap between the promise of America and the possibilities in America for every fellow citizen. There's work to be done, and if I can reintroduce King to some, and introduce him to others, I'll feel like I have done my job."

Smiley also said he and producer J.J. Abrams plan to turn "Death of a King" into a TV miniseries at the end of 2018.

Ser Davos Seaworth talks about season 8's scripts

And "They are extraordinary," says Liam Cunningham.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

After his seemingly trivial introduction back in season 2 of "Game of Thrones," Liam Cunningham's Ser Davos Seaworth has undeniably grown into one of the most popular characters in the entire show — trusted right-hand man to Kit Harington's Jon Snow, and someone who has also unknowingly committed the most famous act of incest in television history.

But it took a bit of patience to get to this point.

"I was getting excited and nervous," Cunningham shares, after revealing the storylines were more difficult to get his hands on than a stockpile of Valyrian steel. "I wanted to see what was going on. One of the main reasons was that as an actor my ambition for this was to get to the last season, and I've been waiting on the scripts to see if I can get to the last episodes."

Thankfully good things come to those who wait.

"I have everything," he says. "I've read everything. I've seen everything, and we are well into shooting the last season now. It's a goer!"

"What happened was I didn't get a chance to read them (initially)," Cunningham shares. "Myself and Kit Harington didn't get to read them until we went to the read-through, and it's just 'oohs' and 'ahhs.' It's as it was in the past — just beautiful stoto do it," recalls Cunningham. "It was incredibly special and moving. It was nice ... but slightly sad."

Cunningham and the rest of the "GoT" team are well aware that it's the perfect time to bring the show to an end, though, as he insisted that carrying it on any longer would be doing "the story a disservice."

"The reason it's as big as it is, and was, is its recognized by the audience as extraordinary storytelling," Cunningham tells me. "It always had a beginning, middle and end."

In the meantime, stay glued to Metro for further revelations. In the meantime, enjoy Cunningham's performance in "24 Hours to Live," in theaters now.

But one that will come with more than a few tears.

NFL FIELD WIDE OPEN FOR PATS TO WIN IT ALL

In the Patriots' unprecedented 16-year run of tyranny over the NFL, there were boogeymen (or boogey-teams, rather) that always posed considerable threats to the Pats winning it all.

People thought it was going to be impossible to beat the "Greatest Show on Turf" St. Louis Rams in 2001, people continued to believe Peyton Manning and the Colts could slay the Pats throughout the 2000s, the Ravens posed a considerable threat to the throne at the beginning of this decade, and the Broncos' defense was strong enough to take down the Pats in two AFC title games in the past five years. In 2014, no matter how much dominance the Pats showed in the AFC that season — there was always the threat of having to meet the Legion of Boom and the Seahawks (then the defending champs) in the Super Bowl. Two years ago in the NFC, the Panthers rode a 15-1 record into the playoffs, and last year the Packers — with a healthy Aaron Rodgers — and Atlanta — with MVP Matt Ryan — both looked mighty scary.

Each December the past few years, the following was a common thought around here: "The Pats should win the AFC. I dunno if they can beat TEAM X from the NFC. Those guys look pretty damn good. ... But it's the Super Bowl, so anything can happen."

This season though, there is no boogey-team in the NFC. The previously one-loss Eagles had their shine removed Sunday night by the Seahawks, and even if Philly makes it to the Big Game, does a second-year QB and a second-year head coach really scare you against Bill Friggin' Belichick?

All of the other NFC contenders shouldn't have Pats fans shaking in their boots, either.

The Vikings? Case Keenum is a nice story, but he still wakes up each morning and his name is "Case Keenum."

The Rams? Their 30-year-old head coach is young enough to be Belichick's grandson (assuming Belichick was sexually active during his college days at Wesleyan).

The Saints? In Week 2 the Pats defense was a complete mess but they still found a way to slam the Saints in New Orleans, 36-20.

The Seahawks? Brady against a Seattle defense with no Kam Chancellor and no Richard Sherman? Sign me up.

The Panthers? Yeah, this would be a challenge as they've already beaten the Pats (in Foxboro, no less) this year. But Carolina is currently the six seed in the NFC and it would take some run to get back to the Super Bowl.

In the AFC? You already know where things stand. It's the Patriots, and it's the Steelers. That's it.

And even if Pittsburgh were to beat the Pats at Heinz Field on Dec. 17, you've gotta believe that Las Vegas would make the Pats the favorite if they met a month later in the AFC title game.

Brady and the Patriots own Heinz Field in January, and when the Steelers have to come to Foxboro for a big game? No chance.

Now, we know that the NFL wants no part of yet another Patriots Super Bowl win. We are currently in the worst PR year in the league's history (which is saying something) and the league's popularity is declining. Having the Patriots in the Super Bowl again and having them win it again would be the dingleberry on top of the poop sundae that is the 2017 NFL season. The Pats winning would be a boring, "same old, same old" result for a boring, "same old, same old" season.

Gronk to appeal suspension

Patriots tight end Rob Gronkowski will appeal the one-game suspension that was handed out by the NFL to him on Monday. Gronkowski was slapped with the discipline due to a play in which he drove his arm into the back of Bills cornerback Tre'Davious White's helmet. Last month, Bengals WR AJ Green punched Jaguars CB Jalen Ramsey in the back of the helmet. Green was ejected from the game but not suspended.

So maybe Roger Goodell will devise some sort of plan to have the refs screw the Patriots in the playoffs (ala that memorable Sunday night game in Denver two years ago). But unless something crazy like that goes down, the rest of America will have to deal with their never-ending football nightmare again this February — the Patriots as Super Bowl champs.
